Restricted Goods Permit (RGP)

Conditions for the export of certain firearms and associated parts, accessories and ammunition using a Restricted Goods Permit

A Restricted Goods Permit authorises the export applicable firearms as part of the export's accompanied personal effects.

Conditions

Applicants must present a valid Firearm License and a Certificate of Registration (proof-of-ownership documents) at the time of application.

An RGP is applicable for the export of firearms, and accompanying parts, accessories and ammunition excluding the following firearm types:

- Class C firearms
- Class D firearms
- Fully automatic firearms
- Firearms greater than 0.5" (12.7 mm) in calibre
- Replica firearms
- Antique firearms

Circumstances where an RGP is not applicable:

- for commercial exports
- firearms sent for repair or return
- for the export more than four (4) firearms
- firearm/s sent by mail
- firearm/s going to a destination that is subject to a United Nations or other sanction or arms embargo
- where an export permit has already been obtained from the Department of Defence
- for the export of firearms as unaccompanied personal effects

Firearm parts, accessories and ammunition may only be exported using an RGP if these goods are being exported with the associated firearm, also included on the RGP.

The following quantity limits apply:

- Ammunition:
 - 4000 rounds - target shooting
 - 300 rounds - protection in international waters against piracy
 - 200 rounds - hunting
- Reasonable quantities of associated parts and accessories

Applicants are reminded that the RGP is not valid until an officer of the Australian Customs Service has conducted a physical examination of the firearm/s and associated parts, accessories and ammunition to verify that the description of the goods match those listed on the RGP.

Obtaining authorisation to export a firearm not suitable for export using an RGP

If you wish to export a firearm that is not applicable for export using an RGP, you should contact the Defence Trade Control and Compliance Section of the Department of Defence to obtain a standard military export permit.

Applicants are required to complete an Export Application Form and submit this to the Department of Defence for processing. Processing may take up to ten (10) working days for non-sensitive applications, whilst sensitive applications require between 21 working days and three (3) months to process.

If unsure whether the export of certain firearm/s is applicable for export using either an RGP or a standard military export permit, applicants are encouraged to seek advice at the earliest opportunity from the Defence Trade Control and Compliance Section on Tel. 02 6266 2586 or email dtcc@defence.gov.au
